The Audiphone.

Some interesting experiments were made yesterday at the School for the Deaf and Dumb, and at a private residence in the Dumb, and at a private restrictive in the city, with the newly-invented instrument, the audiphone, for the purpose of aiding the deaf to hear. The instrument is a very simple one, resembling a square fan of some eight by ten inches, and when not in tensimple one, resembling a square fan of some eight by ten inches, and when not in tension might readily be mistaken for one. Its material is valeable, and it is readily bent following in the experiments were until the experiments were quited are, which differs in different placed against the teath, and thus communicating with the auditory nerve inside the drum of the ear. The inventor, Mr. R. S. Rhodes, of Chicago, who is himself deaf, first received the idea by finding that be could hear its water tilek when held against the ear, and the vibratory disk of the telephone suggested the instrument. The experiments were quite successful with all persons in various stages of defences, except the total. The deaf will had only heard conversation by its being shouled in a very loud tone, or by the use of the ear-trumpet, found that they could bear conversation in the cordinary tone with considerable case, one of whom had been born deaf, and the experiments, when tried will also of the bear shouled bear conversation in the cordinary tone with considerable case, one of whom had been born deaf, and the other became absolutely ex, when tried will also of the conversation in the cordinary tone with considerable case, of whom had been born deaf, and the other became absolutely ex, when tried will also of the bear experiments, when tried will also of the conversation in the cordinary tone with considerable case, of the cordinary tone with considerable case, of whom had been born deaf, and the other became absolutely ex, when tried will also of the cordinary tone with considerable case, time and disappointment. He experiments, when tried will also of the cordinary tone with considerable case, time and disappointment. He experiments were the cordinary tone with considerable case, the cordinary tone with considerable case, the first the cordinary tone with considerable case, the cordinary tone with cons tirely destroyed, of course the instrument is useless, and in eases of congenital deafness the pupils have to learn what may be called the meaning of sound, and English words are as unintelligible as a foreign language. With these the effects of the audiphone must be much slower in being perceived. Rut in any event the audiphone appears to be of great benefit to those partialty deaf, and is a great improvement over the ear-trumpet, which injures the ear by concentrating sounds upon it .- Providence A Horse's Revenge.

[Paris correspondence London Telegraph.]

The Society for the Protection of Animals against the cruelty of human animals is not remarkable for its activity in this country. The police appear to think it no business of theirs when carters or coachmen brutally maltreat their horses in the streets, or when boys amuse themselves by torturing dogs and cats or whatever other creatures have the ill-luck to fall into their hands. The horses would appear to be aware of the supineness of their supposed protectors, for they have taken the matter into their own hands, or rather into their own teeth and feet. A carter by dint of hard flogging at his three horses persuaded them to drug sixteen tons of coal to the foot of the steep hill which leads to the Boulevard Bessieres; but his powers of stimulation utterly failed to induce them to proceed any further-a thick steam rose up from their panting sides and nostrils. "Budge!" said the fiend; and straightway the carter began to lash and swear. A crowd gathered around the ferocious beast, who abandoned the lash and began to bang his stick into their heads and kick them with hob-nailed boots in the sides. The leader of the team took upon himself to protest against this extreme measure. He turned round, seized the carter's arm with his teeth, tossed him to the ground, and trampled him with his hoofs; then seized him again with his teeth and tossed him about. The crowd and the police, which had looked approvingly on while he tortured the horses, interfered for the protection of the human monster, who was with great difficulty torn bleeding and mangled from the inst equine resentment. He is from the just equine resentment. He is justly punished; but surely some penalty should be inflicted on the railway company which sent out this heavy load of coal to be drawn up-hill by three horses, when twice the number would have barely sufficed for the work. The carter has paid his penalty; let theirs now be inflicted. Why should not the police be armed with full power to dispatch to the fourriere any vehicle loaded beyond the power of the horses harnessed

The Kind of Springs They Have in Florida.

[From the Tallahassee Sun.] From my hotel window I can look out almost any clear day and see a dim column of smoke in the far southwest. I have asked the cause of it and have been told t'at it is the vapor from a boiling spring, which has never been found, owing to the impenetrable nature of the swamp in which it is situated. My informants say it frequently deceived blockade-runners during the war. The runners would suppose it a signal from shore and run in to certain capture. I suggested one day that perhaps there might be some illicit whiskey distillation going on in that swamp. The possibility, and even probability, was admitted. "Then none of you, I presume," I asked, "saw that col-umn of smoke before or during the war?" None had seen it until the tax on whiskey was leyied, for, they said, they had never had their attention called to it until of late

I accosted a gray-haired negro on the subject of the smoky column : "Well, sar," says he, "if you was down in de neighbor kood of whar dat smoke is, and you should leave a jug alongside de road with a quarter tied to the handle, you'd be mighty ap' to find dat jug filled wid whiskey next

"Where would the quarter be, uncle?" "Dat would be gone, sar." "And could I spend a quarter that way every day?" "As many as you like. If you tie a half a dollar dey'll gib you half a dollar's worth of whiskey, and dey'll gib you good mea-"Do they do much business in that line?"

I asked. "I don't know nuffin about dat, sar : I only knows dat you get as much whiskey in de jug as de money tied to de handle will pay for."

I don't want the readers of this to discredit the existence in Florida of great springs, natural bridges, or sunken lands making room for lakes, for these are natural phenomena, and can be seen and verified.

A Warning to Jokers.

[From the Detroit News.] Some time in 1864 there was a number of army officers stopping at a hotel in Washington. Among them was Captain Emer-son. There was also a Captain Jones, who was a first-rate fellow, a good officer, and very pompous. Emerson and Jones used to have a good deal of joking together at the table and elsewhere. One day at the dinner-table, when the dining-hall was well filled, Captain Jones finished his cinner first, got up and walked almost to the dining hall door, when Emerson spoke to him in a loud voice and said, "Halloa, bim to remove it from its biding-place. The supposed corpse in the bag was a live medical student. The students pointed out the spot where the bag was concealed, and the most poer where the bag over his shoulder and set out for the college. The corpse, with no beautiful the college of his whereshouts, straightened black of light and corpse of his whereshouts, straightened black of light and corpse of little and corps of little and corpse of littl
